Important Style Features as Shown in These Fall Garments

THE SUITS Tailored coats, jackets have large collar tabs and are cinched in at the waist. The skirts of the jackets are full and inclined to ripple. Pockets are prominent features. The Skirts are still quite full and a more trim longer with simpler lines. Materials are gabardines, velvets, velour, chintz, batistes, sponges and manilla worsteds. Demi-tailored Suits are rather contractions of trimming of the tailored styles, with the style touches unmounted.

THE DRESSES Show a marked tendency to even out effects, generally caught up or open at the sides. Blouses on the fashion front vary greatly, the popular in many directions. Evening Dresses are not simple this year, most of them being long fitting waist and very large and ample skirts. Materials in street dresses, sponges and satins are favorite. In reception dresses, satin and crepe de chine, in evening gowns, taffetas and the softer silks and gossamer in all styles.

THE COATS are remarkable for their variety of style—the one ever-present feature being the high and voluminous collars. Large pockets very much like the pockets of the English soldiers' uniforms give decoration and style. Dressy Coats also retain the great collars and full bows from the shoulder. Evening Coats are quite full and have cap-like collars in many different interpretations.

MILLINERY What will you wear? Perhaps we should tell you just this much—large hats with just a bit of trimming; small, close-fitting hats that are trimmed straight up to the air-satin and velvet hats, hats with great groups of ribbons and feathers, but just this bit and no more, for we want you to enjoy the surprise.

FAIR PLAN WILL HELP UNIVERSITY ORE COLLECTION

Exhibitors of Minerals at Big Show Who Don't Want to Ship Them Back May Store Them at the Institution.

A plan which will be a boon to mineral owners, it is expected, at the same time will give the University of New Mexico an opportunity to add to the number of ore samples and minerals in its museum available for study by the students has been proposed by Dr. Charles T. Kirk. Dr. Kirk is superintendent of the geology department of the university.

In brief, Dr. Kirk's plan is this:

The exhibitors of mining material at the fair who do not wish to part with their samples may store them in the museum of the university for the duration of the fair. When the new science building at the university has been completed, the material will be displayed in it and returned to the exhibitors on demand. Should the plan be carried out from year to year, the mining section of the museum will, in effect, be a permanent collection of the products of the mining industry of the state.

The plan was met with the satisfaction of the management and the university authorities and it now remains only to obtain the consent of the exhibitors to it. Of course, should an exhibitor wish his samples returned, they will be so done in fact, this course will be pursued by all who do not state specifically that they wish the institution to have charge of their exhibit material.

The understanding is that exhibitors may return their exhibits to the manager of the museum at any time he chooses to do so.
